Lillian looked at Harold.

Harold covered his face with his hands and said in a hoarse voice, "I said get out."

He felt like the most pathetic man in the world.

What happened?

How did he end up like this?

With tears on her delicate face, Lillian slowly buttoned up her shirt.

When she stood up from the sofa, her legs were trembling, and she couldn't stand steadily at all. Even so, she didn't dare to stay. She turned around and walked out of the room.

As soon as she shut the door behind her, she heard the sound of breaking glass. It came from inside the room.

Harold wailed.

It turned out that such a rough man truly and deeply loved someone. Lillian thought that the girl named Rena was very lucky. She was sincerely loved by a man like Harold.

Hearing the noise, the manager came over. Seeing Lillian, he snapped, "What are you doing out here? Didn't you serve Mr. Moore well?"

Lillian bit her lip in response.

She replied in a quivering voice, "Mr. Moore has mistaken me for someone else. I told him that I wasn't the woman he wanted, and he suddenly lost his temper."

The manager clicked his tongue and shook his head.

He looked at the closed door and then hissed, "No matter who Mr. Moore thinks you are, you just have to suck it up and please him! Your job is to make our guests happy!"

Lillian lowered her head, not daring to retort.

The manager wanted Lillian to apologize to Harold, but another guest requested Lillian to drink with him. The manager thought that he couldn't offend any of the guests, so he let Lillian go.

After that, the manager went to apologize to Harold himself.

When he opened the door, the smell of alcohol greeted him.

Broken glass and good wine were all over the floor. Seeing all that wine wasted, the manager couldn't help sighing and shaking his head.

Harold opened two more bottles of wine for himself.

When he saw the manager come in, he didn't say anything.

He just poured some wine into a fresh glass and continued drinking.

The manager poured more wine for Harold and comforted him.

"Mr. Moore, it's not worthwhile to drink so much and hurt your health all because of a woman."

Harold squinted at him, "Who says I'm drinking because of a woman?"

The manager poured himself a glass of wine as well and drank. He told Harold, "You used to be carefree and free-spirited."

Harold was in a trance.

The manager was right.

In the past, no woman had ever been able to upset him. In fact, even when he and Rena were together, he still slept with other women.

A light kiss could make Rena happy for a long time.

Harold lowered his head and lit a cigarette.

He blew a smoke ring in the air and asked the manager, "When a woman has sex with a man, does she become loyal to him? Does her love for him become enduring?"

The manager smiled.

"No, Mr. Moore. It's very normal for a woman to have sex with a man without developing an emotional attachment. As long as a person is driven by lust, then he or she will seek to satisfy that urge no matter what. Lillian is pure and young. Weren't you satisfied with her last time? Please forgive her this time."

The truth was, Harold didn't take what happened just now personally. Hearing the manager mention Lillian, he asked casually, "Where is she?"

He remembered that she cried in front of him.

Seeing that Harold wasn't at all displeased with Lillian, the manager cleared his throat and answered, "She went to another room. If you like her, I'll ask her to accompany you next time."

Harold said nothing.

He was in a bad mood tonight, so he continued to drink and soon got wasted.

In the drunken haze, he could see Rena through his mind's eye, sitting on Waylen's lap and kissing him. The enthusiastic look on Rena's face that contrasted her timid demeanor drove Harold insane.

Now he was drunk and very angry.

He even thought about storming into Waylen's place and dragging Rena out. He wanted to tell her that he regretted letting her go, that he would give up the power of the Fowler family to be with her. Most importantly, he wanted to promise her that he would be faithful to her for as long as they were together.

He just wanted Rena to like him again!

Suddenly, Harold realized that those years when he was loved
